Agency Predicts Disaster Without Promised Food

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NAIROBI - Food aid pledged but undelivered to African countries suffering from drought and famine is needed to "avert a major disaster" in the countries most severely affected, the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization said Monday.

In its latest report on the food crisis in Africa, the FAO said 42 percent of the grain promised by donor governments has not been

"Only concerted action in the coming weeks by the international community and the governments of the affected countries can avert a major disaster in the six most affected countries, namely Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mozambique, Ni-ger and Sudan," it said.

"These six countries constitute the hard core of the problem in terms of sheer size of areas and human numbers affected, the degree of malnutrition and threat to life."

The FAO said that 15 other African countries were also suffering severe food shortages.

The UN agency expressed con-cern that aid pledged to some coun-tries had not materialized, particularly in Sudan, where less than 20 percent of 1.1 million metric tons of pledged aid had arrived.

It said the food supply situation in Sudan was "extremely serious and deteriorating rapidly.

"Exceptional measures to deliver the pledged amounts are needed before the onset of rains in June if widespread deaths from starvation are to be avoided," it said.

For Chad the food supply situation was critical because of a lack of trucks to move relief supplies and limited capacity at ports in Cameroon and Nigeria. Chad is landiocked.

angry at being depicted as insensi-tive to the Holocaust after 40 years of speaking up about "Nazi crimes" against the Jews.

Afterward, Mr. Reagan called the day one of "hope and remem-brance," but his uncharacteristically sober mien seemed to say that it was also an ordeal. Mr. Reagan's speech at Bergen-Belsen protimed that "horror cannot cutlast hope," but Mr. Reagan appeared somber rather than hopeful.

Before he spoke he viewed the photographs of stacks of corpses in the camp's Document House, then strolled through a series of memorials above mass graves. Mr. Reagan has always been sensitive to the notion that he is a former actor who can weep on cue. At Bergen-Belsen he appeared to be trying not to cry, almost trying not to act, as he gave a speech recalling "the monstrous, incomparable horror" of the camp.

But his voice broke nonetheless as he read from a passage in the diary of Anne Frank, a 15-year-old At the Bitburg air base, where

He had one minor slip, referring to the camp as "Berger-Belsen" and added one brief passage in which he said he had reflected, as he flew in over the green countryside, that "there must have been a time when the prisoners at Bergen-Belsen, and those at every other camp, must have felt the springtime was gone forever from their lives."

In his subsequent Bitburg speech, written a week ago, Mr. Reagan read from a text describing his visit to Bergen-Belsen and saying he had felt "great sadness"

Mr. Reagan's speeches, largely crafted by his premier political speech writer, Kenneth Khachigian, were notable for what they omitted as well as what they said. At Bergen-Belsen, where more than 60,000 civilians, including 30,000 Jews, perished, Mr. Reagan made no mention of the 50,000

New York Times Service BONN - Fears of a scientific brain drain to American industry and of unrest at home largely explain President François Mitterrand's objection at the Bonn summit conference to setting a date for new trade talks and his rejection of Washington's invitation to join its space defense program, French officials and other participants say.

West European governments, these sources say, fear that the $26billion missile defense research program will divert Europe's best scientists and skills to American industry, giving the United States an unassailable lead in ultramodern technologies with extensive civilian applications.

"Democracy will be only be complete when all Germans and all Europeans are united," Mr. Reagan said in his half-hour address to about 10,000 people at Hambach Castle.

Mr. Reagan aimed his criticism at the Communist states of Eastern Europe with references to the wall that divides Berlin, the former German capital, and with a pledge of "solidarity with the freedom fight-ers in Poland."

Mr. Reagan told the West German youths that they must be real-istic about the need for a strong defense against the Soviet Union.

"Unless and until there is a changing by the other side," he said, "the United States must fulfill a commitment of its own - to the survival of liberty."

"The first frontier of European liberty begins in Berlin," he added, "and I assure you that America will stand by you in Europe, and America will stand by you in Berlin."

Mr. Reagan's support for the reunification of Germany was certain to anger the Soviet Union, which considers the borders agreed on at the end of World War II to be inviolable. Mr. Reagan's visit to the cemetery at Bitburg which contains the graves of 49 Waffen SS members,

WASHINGTON — A newly declassified letter reveals that top scientists in the Manhattan Project, the World War II effort in the United States to invent the atomic bomb, considered a plan to poison half a million of the enemy with radioactively contaminated food. The plan, never carried out, is mentioned in a letter, dated May 25, 1943, from J. Robert Oppenheimer, who directed the Los Alamos bomb laboratory in New Mexico, to Enrico Fermi, the Manhattan Project researcher who achieved the first controlled nuclear chain reaction a year earlier. In the letter, Oppenheimer refers to the plan as if it were Fermi's idea, discusses technical problems to be solved and concludes: "I think we should not attempt a the Bonn economic summit conference to set a starting date for negotiations on global trade is likely to increase protectionist pressures in Congress, according to Secretary of Labor William E. Brock.

Mr. Brock, who until last week was U.S. trade representative, said in an interview Sunday that if the preparatory meetings scheduled for July should bog down, "There will be a lot of pressure on Congress to take unilateral action."

Beyond the specific trade issue, there was a sense of dismay in Washington on the more general lack of results at the Bonn meeting. especially at a time when the U.S. economy, which has been the main force in global growth over the past two years, may be entering a slack

Washington Post Service trade news, such as high monthly trade deficits, will stir emotions on Capitol Hill.

U.S. officials are disappointed, but not surprised, by the failure to get unanimous agreement in Bonn, even though six of the seven countries wanted to insert 1986 as the starting date. President François Mitterrand of France had indicated earlier that he would attempt to delay a new trade round.

> The same source said that Mr. Mitterrand appeared worried that France may not be competitive in the services and high-technology products that the United States hopes to put on the table during new trade negotiations.

Mr. Reagan also went to Bonn committed to get Western Europe and Japan to expand their econorand, while linking a demand for thoroughgoing monetary reform ing thrust of the U.S. economy.

The U.S. contribution to this package was to have been a pledge to reduce the $200-billion U.S. budget deficit and a new willingness to consider monetary reforms.

With some bitterness, the U.S. team lays the blame almost wholly on Mr. Mitterrand. "French politicians believe they gain when they're isolated," a U.S.

While some of the president's aides effusively praised the speeches - Assistant Secretary of State Richard R. Burt called them "a brilliant performance" - the private expectations of the president's advisers were more subdued.

The White House has been buoyed by surveys taken by a veteran Reagan pollster, Richard Wirth-lin, said to show the president's popularity holding firm in the face of Bitburg. Some other surveys, however, give conflicting results. While it probably will be days or weeks before it becomes clear whether Mr. Reagan has succeeded in putting Bitburg behind him, the controversy has left two legacies. One is a conspicuous deterioration of relations with the press, whom Mr. Reagan and his aides blame for blowing the incident out of proportion. The other is an unaccustomed defensiveness in the Reagan White

U.S. Protests Mark Visit To Cemetery By Reagan

NEW YORK - Many Americans reacted with sorrow and anger over President Ronald Reagan's visit to a German military cemetery as the United States marked the 40th anniversary of victory in Eu-

In New York, Washington and in cities and small towns across the United States, people assembled Sunday for marches and railies.

The reaction to the president's visit to Bitburg cemetery was overwhelmingly negative, ranging from muted criticism to outright denunciation. Leading Jews, the leaders of other religions, Holocaust survivors, spokesmen for veterans groups and labor organizations, members of Congress and thousands of other Americans joined the choruses of rejection.

But there were also words of praise for the president's speech at the site of the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp, and some leaders said his quest for reconciliation had stirred new interest in the Holocaust. There were calls, too, to put the controversy over the cemetery visit to rest. In New York, an estimated 240,000 people at a rally for Soviet Jews heard Elie Wiesel, the writer and Holocaust survivor, call Mr. Reagan's visit to the Bitburg cemetery an insensitive act that had "wounded" the world's Jews and distorted history by equating Holocaust victims with Nazi soldiers. At Arlington National Cemetery near Washington, a survivor of the Holocaust told a gathering of 700 Jewish war veterans and their families that the president's trip to the Bitburg cemetery was an attempt to obscure German moral responsibility for the Nazi terror.

The image of an American tresident, no matter how well-intentioned, going to a German ceme-tery sends to the world the wrong signals," said Benjamin Meed, president of the American Gathering and Federation of Jewish Holocaust Survivors. "It says all these men were the same, that they fought with good intentions."

U.S. Balloon Race 'Too Close to Call'

PALM SPRINGS, California (UPI) - The Gordon Bennett International Cup balloon race was "too close to call" Monday as the defending champion, its helium supply nearly exhausted, hovered over Nevada near the grounded leader.

A spokesman said the Rosie O'Grady, piloted by Joe Kittinger, winner of the past two races, was north of Lathrop, Nevada, about 75 miles (120 kilometers) northwest of Las Vegas. It was not clear whether Mr. Kittinger had outdistanced the California Grape, which had traveled 192 miles before coming down in the Nevada desert Sunday night. The winner in the race, which began Saturday in Palm Springs, will be the balloon that goes the farthest.

The helium balloon race, which began in Paris in 1906 and was an annual event until World War II, was revived in 1979. It is named for James Gordon Bennett Jr., founder of the Paris newspaper that became the International Herald Tribune.

Justice Minister Resigns in Kuwait

CAIRO (IHT) - Kuwait's justice minister, threatened with a noconfidence vote in parliament over charges of embezzlement and mismanagement of public funds, has resigned, according to news reports from Kuwait. He is the first cabinet minister to resign under pressure since 1961, when Kuwait achieved independence from Britain.

The resignation of Sheikh Salman al-Duaij al-Sabah was accepted late Sunday and officially announced Monday, the reports said. A member of Kuwait's ruling family, he stepped down two days before he was to face a no-confidence vote in parliament. The vote would have been the first of its kind in Kuwait.

He will be succeeded by Khaled al-Jassar, who is minister of Islamic affairs. The resignation followed prolonged, stormy sessions of questioning in parliament on the collapse of Kuwait's unofficial stock market in 1982. During a session last Tuesday, Sheikh Salman did not deny opposition charges that his 12-year-old son had received 1.4 million Kuwaiti dinars ($4.6 million) from the fund.

A 'Walk Into the Past'

Following are excerpts from the speeches by President Ronald Reagan and Chancellor Helmu Kohl at the site of the Nazi concentration camp at Bergen-Belsen, West Germany:

Excerpts from Mr. Reagan's speech:

This painful walk into the past has done much more than remind us of the war that consumed the European continent. What we have seen makes unforgettably clear that no one of the rest of us can fully understand the enormity of the feelings carried by the victims of these

And if you are quite serious about expanding, you want tools that will keep pace with you both today and tomorrow.

Consider the IBM PC XT.

The PC XT is an open system.

This means you can slot in more power – much more power – as you need it.

To add these extraordinary capabilities, all you need is an ordinary screwdriver, and one of our expansion adapters.

Of course, unless your business is really heading for big-time computing, the power we put in the PC XT should do nicely for a while.

You can begin with 256KB of user memory. Enough to handle most of today's popular programs.

What really sets the PC XT apart from your normal computer is its 10-megabyte hard disk.

It holds something like two and a half filing cabinets worth of information.

5,000 sheets, which can be viewed and analysed by tapping a few keys.

On the back of the system unit, you'll find eight expansion slots. You can use these to add more memory.

Or use one to attach another 10-megabyte hard disk.

Or a new printer.

Or a communications adapter, which connects you to outside data banks, containing useful information on current events, stock prices or fact sheets on a specific market.

The PC Cluster can make your XT the centre of a small network in which everyone can exchange information, memos and files electronically.

And share your XT's storage space.

There's almost no end to the growth potential of the XT. And isn't that exactly how you see your business?

Bitburg's Hard Lessons

It is over, but the Bitburg blunder, too, should not be forgotten. President Reagan's regret at having promised such a cemetery tribute was palpable. He walked through it with dignity but little reverence. He gave the cameras no emotional angles. All day long, he talked and talked of Hell and Nazi evil. to submerge the event.

No 10-minute gesture requiring all that explanation could retain much symbolic value. Not even Mr. Reagan's eloquence before the mass graves of the former concentration camp at Bergen-Belsen could erase the fact that his visit there was an afterthought, to atone for the inadvertent salute to those SS graves.

What now needs remembering is how quickly even a ceremonial error can develop a political indeed geopolitical life of its own, persuading the most powerful leaders that they are helpless hostages of history.

For all his pain at having to offend so many Americans, Mr. Reagan put it starkly: to abandon his promise to walk with Chancellor Helmut Kohl through the Bitburg cemetery would have looked as if he had "caved in" under pressure. And as Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger were summoned to testify, breaking even a small promise to an ally in the nuclear age would be a grievous sin.

This diplomacy of appearances insists that every presidential act has strategic signifi-cance: Since peace depends on nuclear weapons that can never be used, a president's willingness to use them rests entirely on threats and promises - on words: therefore, a president's words carry cosmic weight, his international promises must be impervious to pressure; indeed, the rougher the going, the more persevering a president must appear. The theory is dangerous precisely because it rests on a foundation of truth. When practiced relentlessly, it can enshrine the most foolish commitments. And if pursued to absurd lengths, as in Bitburg, it makes strategic duty the enemy of democratic values. True strength resides securely between obduracy and complaisance. Strong leaders avoid both extremes.

Still, one could almost hear Mr. Reagan's lesser rationalizations as he let Mr. Kohl drag him through this "act of reconciliation." Had not the chancellor stared down even stronger protests to plant Pershing missiles on his soil? Will not "star wars" get a boost from his gratitude for this political favor?

Sunday's final travesty was the pretense that German-American reconciliation still required affirmation - four decades after the Marshall Plan and the Berlin Airlift. This alliance will survive the folly of Bitburg, just as it would have survived the cancellation of Bitburg, because it is now deeply rooted, in the democratic politics and prosperity of all its peoples. So too are the economic dysfunctions that worried all seven leaders of the industrial democracies at the Bonn meetings preceding Bitburg. No mere words and gestures of fel-lowship at the summit could move President François Mitterrand of France to schedule a conference on trade barriers, which might threaten the protections of his farmers. And no mere lip service to interdependence could overcome the leaders' political fears of tampering with the world's monetary system. It was a troubled summit. But what a blessing to find democracy behind the troubles. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The poet-theologian John Donne made that point in his "no man is an island" passage, and Ernest Heming-way used a phrase from Donne in the title of his book about resistance to fascism, "For Whom the Bell Tolls." Many Jews will remember the les-

To understand humanity, you must be an active part of it. Mr. Reagan, a month ago, had no real grasp of the moral priorities of the Holocaust or the fear of forgetting that prevents forgiveness. His journey to understanding — his own "painful walk into the past" — opened the minds of millions to the costs of reconciliation in a way that no other process could have accomplished. In driving home the lessons of history, his incredible series of blunders turned out to be a blessing.

At first, he did not want to go to a be part of an upbeat trip. Like so many, he praised "remembrance" so long as it involved no personal pain. The discovery of SS graves in the scheduled cemetery visit saved him from the sin of avoidance. So Mr. Reagan —and the world —had to go to a death camp and bear witness.

Reagan's 'painful walk into the past' opened the minds of millions to the costs of reconciliation.

the death camps with the dead soldiers of the Third Reich. He soon learned, along with millions who had never given the matter any thought, that no reconciliation could ever come about by glossing over the enormity of the crimes committed by the Nazis and all the Ger-mans who enthusiastically abetted them. Feeling sadness at the grave of soldiers is on a different order of magnitude from feeling agony at the slaughter of innocents.

The president absorbed the point.

In an inspiring penance in the Oval Office, he led a huge andience in listening to the testimony of Elie Wiesel, the quintessential survivor.
The invisible teaching hand would not let go. An ignoble motive (fear of appearing weak and subject to pres-sure) merged with a noble motive (the concern about insulting a new generation of Germans) to send him to a place tainted with the graves of storm troopers. This posed a test: Would he understand, and be able to articulate both the need for remembrance and the requirement for reconciliation? in part one of this amazing exam.

he stood at Bergen-Belsen alongside the German chancellor, a man of relentless repentance, "to confront and condemn the acts of a hated regime of the past."

The Jewish prayer for the dead speaks not only of the dead, but de-terminedly of faith in God; fittingly, the president stressed the message of the doomed Anne Frank, "I still be-lieve that people are good at heart." No photograph can be as affecting as that example of intelligent innocence and pure hope snuffed out. The ritual 'never again" had context.

In the final part of the test, at the Bitburg cemetery, he acknowledged the presence of the Nazi graves first by turning his back on them, then by contrasting them with the remains of young draftees, and left the judgment to Heaven. He did not equate them with their victims or with the soldiers who fell in a moral cause. One false note was an extended anecdote about the suspension of hostilities on a holiday — as if the Wehrmacht had been made up mainly of sentimental boys — but he drew the central lesson clearly: "that freedom must always be stronger than totalitarianism, that good must always be stronger than evil."

That followed his uplifting "I am a Berliner, I am a Jew in a world still threatened by anti-Semitism" pas-sage, and for me redeemed the thoughtless early planning of this trip. In seeking at first to sidestep smoldering resentments, the presi-dent brought on a firestorm 40 years after a Holocaust, which in turn forced a forgetful world through a most necessary grief.

Historically Blind, We Are Intellectually Defenseless

WASHINGTON — History has been in fashion here for a few days. We have been wallowing in the anniversaries of the wars we failed to avoid, but most of the time, even in Washington, history is a parade of forgotten memories.

The new secretary of education,
William J. Bennett, has recently been deploring this national absentmindedness. He notes that the study of history, as distinct from "social studies," is no longer required in most high schools, and that in many states even the teachers of history have little or no serious training in the subject.

The present decline in the status of history in our schools is very serious," he told a conference on Civic Virtue and Academic Excellence. To put the matter plainly, to be ignorant of history is to be, in a very fundamental way, intellectually de-fenseless, unable to understand the workings either of our own society or

This is not a new idea, as Mr. Bennett recognizes, for he collects more quotations than anybody since Bartlett and stuns his listeners with the findings of every student of edu- editor of Time magazine, has written cation from Thomas Jefferson to an excellent book on his days in the

By James Reston Daniel Patrick Moynihan. But the idea is still important: "We cannot hope that our students will know why the world got into its present situa tion — or even what that situation is - if they know so little of the events that came before them."

What Mr. Bennett did not say is that if we do not teach history in the high schools and, in addition, turn our universities into employment agencies, we should not be surprised if the people elect members of Congress and even presidents who share their shaky knowledge or even ignorance of the history of the world.

It is not only our children who, without historical memory, are left "intellectually defenseless." President Reagan could not possibly have blundered into the cemeteries of Germany, with the best of intentions and the hope of "reconciliation," unless he was ignorant of the brutal and tragic facts of the last world war. He is not the first or the worst of recent presidents who have neglected history. Hedley Donovan, the former White House of Jimmy Carter, when, as he says, "I was offered almost unlimited access," and he reports on this experience with candor.

Mr. Donovan obviously respects Mr. Carter, and thinks historians of the future will be more generous than today's journalists about his administration, but he makes an interesting observation about the Georgian's

"odd lack of a sense of history."
"In Carter's immense storehouse of information," Mr. Donovan says, plenty of history must have been packed away, yet it never seemed a steady presence in his thinking."

I think the links between education, history and politics are vital to the security of the nation, the defense of freedom and a decent order in the world. But I do not think these relationships are clear or are getting the attention they deserve.

It may be that the disappointments and tragedies of U.S. foreign policy since the last world war were not military or strategic, but misjudg-ments of history and philosophy. We fought the Korean and Vietnam wars on the assumption that

So what? First, I think it is a bum idea to introduce golf into China. It is a punishment for man's sins. The missionaries tried that in the 18th and 19th centuries and it didn't work. Second, I think Mr. Bennett should insist on teaching languages as well as history. We are sitting around in our

will

M ENLO PARK, California — It is generally agreed that there is a positive side to today's strong dollar and enormous trade deficit This is the inflow of foreign capital into the United States credit market —a foreign "subsidy" that is keeping interest rates lower than they would otherwise be. What people do not understand is the surprising stability

Fear is afoot that the present state of affairs is untenable. Financial commentators insistently caution that foreign investor sentiment may sour on American financial assets, causing a large-scale outflow of capi-tal from the United States. Such an outflow would put severe pressure on interest rates, imperiling economic recovery as well as the prospects of Third World debtor nations

In point of fact, there will not be, and cannot be, any such outflow of funds in the next two or three years. It is a near certainty that capital inflows will continue, and at a rate exceeding 1984's record $100 billion. How can this be? The answer lies in understanding an accounting relationship of international finance: The net foreign capital inflow into a nation running a trade deficit will exactly equal its trade deficit. (In technical parlance, the nation's "cap-ital account surplus" will equal its "current account deficit.")

The only time this will not happen is when the central bank intervenes in the foreign exchange market something the Federal Reserve Board has been loath to do in recent years.

Why does this accounting relation-ship hold? From an international Russia and China had composed bookkeeping standpoint, what is ca-sually referred to as a "foreign inflow their ancient quarrels and had formed a military alliance that would dominate the Asian-European conti-nent from the Sea of Japan to the Ruhr, the Rhine and the North Sea. of funds" is the money that finances the trade deficit. It plugs the financial gap that arises when a country im-But history told in the end; they fell ports more BMWs than it exports apart, and the United States now has Chevrolets. Since America cannot better relations with both Moscow sell enough Chevrolets to linance its and Beijing than they have with each other (which is not saying much). consumption, it must sell something else, and it does: financial assets, pri-Now the Chinese are trying to decide between the new sweetened Coke and manly IOUs such as Treasury and corporate bonds. This is the "inflow" of foreign funds.

What does all this have to do with the likelihood that foreign inflows will continue? Everything. The accounting relationship makes clear that if the country continues to run a trade deficit, then it is guaranteed equal and offsetting capital inflows. But the United States is going to run a very significant trade delicit for the next two or three years, perhaps long-er. Turning around a trade deficit is like turning around a supertanker. It will require two to three years to right today's deficit -once the dollar falls and U.S. goods become competitive. This argument implicitly treats foreign investors as hostages to the U.S. trade deficit, for which they are hardly responsible. But who says these investors must go on acquiring large quantities of financial assets in the United States, thereby financing the U.S. trade deficit? Should sentiment turn against U.S. assets, wouldn't these investors be free to sell their dollar assets, withdraw their funds and run? The answer is yes, but no. Foreigners will end up "selling" to other foreigners. Suppose assets in the United States suddenly become less attractive, perhaps because of a drop in interest rates. Certain foreign investors would sell their dollar-denominated assets, and in doing so flood the foreign exchange market with dollars. But the resulting "cheaper" dollar would make U.S. securities relatively more attractive to foreigners who, taken as a whole, go on acquiring them. When the dust settled, the dollar would have fallen in value, yet the net inflow of foreign capital - measured in dollars — would be unchanged.

With time, the now-lower dollar would stimulate American exports and cut imports. Thus, the trade deficit would slowly ebb and so would the offsetting foreign inflow of funds. By the time this adjustment process was over, the nation would have is-sued several hundred billion dollars worth of IOUs, would confront annual debt-servicing costs of $30 billion to $40 billion and would no longer benefit from subsidies of foreign capital. This is the flip side to today's inflow of foreign capital.

Milton Stover Eisenhower

"If it wasn't for his name," President Eisenhower once said of his youngest brother, "he would have a very high governmental post." In fact, Milton Stover Eisenhower, who died Thursday at the age of 85, had held very high governmental posts when Dwight Eisenhower was still an obscure officer in the peacetime army. He was, as those who knew him were well aware, a great deal more than the "Ike's Brother" of a thousand newspaper headlines.

Milton Eisenhower was super-bureaucrat, diplomat, university president and the good gray eminence on any number of panels, commissions, study groups and task forces. As The New York Times wrote many years ago. "His friends have come to think of him as ... supremely endowed with the gift of getting the word across. They say his success is based on his ability to express exactly what he means, the way he can knife through to the heart of an issue and the way he can get others to work with him and for him gladly. Dwight Eisenhower said that it was these qualities, not just the fraternal bond, that made Milton one of his most trusted confidants during both administrations. Milton's stature was such that his presence in any venture could lend it additional respect, which was why he was called to serve on 12 presidential commissions over the years, including the one appointed by President Lyndon B. Johnson to study the causes and prevention of violence in 1968. Dr. Eisenhower (his many doctorates were honorary) was not a popular figure with the right wing of his brother's party, and in fact he admitted to occasionally voting for a Democrat for president. "I'm a middle roader," he said in a 1949 interview, "and it burns me up when people call that a neutral or negative position. It isn't. I believe in getting things done." For the past 28 years Milton Eisenhower had lived in Baltimore, where he served two stints as president of Johns Hopkins University and spent a good deal of time watching the Baltimore Orioles. He was regarded with great affection there, and a library on the Hopkins campus was named for him 20 years ago. It is perhaps the most appropriate memorial to a man who believed in the rational application of human knowledge to vexing problems. In June 1968, two years before the violence at Kent State University, he gave a speech on that Ohio campus. "As never before in our history." he said, "we now need citizens who can reason objectively, critically and creatively within a moral framework. We need, in other words . . . Americans who will devote as much time and energy to being wise, democratic citizens as they do to being good physicians, engineers or businessmen. What we need, in other words, is more Milton Eisenhowers.

Bonn: In Disunity, Strength

The summit attendees in Bonn failed to reach agreement on two crucial questions when to start a new round of global trade talks and whether to support U.S. research into the Strategic Defense Initiative. But the leaders demonstrated, as they had at previous summits, that the basic fabric of Western solidarity remains intact.

France opposed a proposal to initiate a new round early next year. It also objected to the SDI project. By choosing to differ, however, France seems to have gained something it hasn't had - a negotiating advantage that can be exploited in the coming talks in Paris between Mr. Mitterrand and the Kremlin's new leader. Mikhail Gorbachev.

The achievement of the Bonn summit is that it maintained an essential degree of cooperation and unity.

The stage is set for the proposed trade round to roll back protectionism; the question of timing can be settled in due course. The absence of a consensus on the Strategic Defense Initiative, which is still largely a question of the future, is not a warning signal, but a healthy indication that Western society can tive with a diversity of opinion.

Last year, for the first time since 1979, U.S. crude-oil imports rose over the previous year's level, by 6.5 percent. Even more troubling was a 30-percent rise in gasoline imports. Major oil producers have been boosting their refining capacity and expanding their exports of gaso-line. This has been a major blow to the U.S. petroleum industry. The United States, in common with other industrialized countries, now has a huge glut in refining capacity. The speakers I heard were convinced that the idea of moral equiva-lence is widespread, deeply rooted in our political culture — not least in our media — and is darkly subversive. It lowers us in our own and many others eyes to the Soviet level, and it puts us at a disadvantage in the struggle to hold up our end of things in the world. Sitting there, I found myself nodding regularly in agree-ment as one luminary of the right after another skewered the plain to help pay for the conference.
The chairman of Radio Free Europe, Frank Shakespeare, introduced Gilbert Robinson as the person who had hatched the idea for the seminar while serving as an adviser to Secre-tary of State George Shultz for "pubtary of State George Shultz for "public relations" (a slip: Mr. Shakespeare meant to say "public diplomacy").

In short, a group of otherwise fiercely independent-minded intellectuals gave the appearance last week of lending themselves to a government-inspired dog-and-pony show. Imagine how these close students of values in politics would rate a conference of Soviet intellectuals. a conference of Soviet intellectuals conducted by a Moscow institute "in cooperation with the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Alfairs."

I can hear some of the speakers, reading this, declaring that they have been furnished an example of precisely the reference property of the

In the hands of enthusiasts, the assault on moral equivalence leaves too little room for fair and necessary criticism of one's own government and society.

If the shortcomings in Western life and policy are going to be played down on the basis that, yes, we have our faults but we are an open, democratic society and we are working on those faults and meanwhile we have to fight for freedom in a dangerous world, then those shortcomings are not going to be identified and attacked with anything close to the necessary vigor. The campaign against moral equivalence and "superpower symmetry" has something useful to teach—the priority of the survival of freedom. But it also has something useful to learn - the requirement of intellectuals that they remain in a position to speak truth to power.

Before the process for the 1986 budget is finished, the House Budget Committee and then the full House will vote on its own plan for restraining the federal deficit, one likely to be very different from the Senate's. There would then be an effort by the two chambers to forge a compromise in conference committee. In the end, there is likely to be a round of negotiations with the White House.

If the House and the Senate agree, they would have produced what is called the budget resolution, a success in itself. But even then there are still votes to be won and opportunities for breakdown.

Sir D. Bailey, Inventor of War Bridge,

LONDON - Sir Donald Bailey, 83, the Englishman who invented the movable Bailey Bridge that played a key role in the Allied viclory in World War II. died Sunday in Bournemouth, England.

Sir Donald's bridge was assembled from welded panels of light steel linked by pinned joints and stretched across pontoons. It could easily be carried by a few men and could hold loads weighing several tons. Used in the Normandy land-ings in June 1944, it carried Allied troops, tanks and guns over scores of rivers and gorges in Europe.

The Bailey Bridge was designed as a collapsible steel bridge, and its ease in construction meant not only that it could be moved quickly but also that if it were destroyed, it could be rebuilt or replaced in a matter of hours. Superior to comparable American models, the bridge was popular with both U.S. and British forces in Italy. It proved especially useful there because German forces came to rely on bridge demolition as a central tactic in delaying the Allied ad-

STOCKHOLM -- The Swedish Industry Federation warned Monday that strikes that have virtually halted foreign trade could critically affect the economy in a few days. However, it expressed optimism about the overall outlook for 1985. The 265,000-member civil servants' union, TCO-S, began a selective walkout Thursday, disrupting Swedish shipping, commercial air traffic and police, postal and other key services.

The union is seeking a 3.1-percent pay raise. The Civil Service Employers Board has offered a 2percent raise starting in January.

On Monday, the union eased a walkout by postmen to allow delivery of pension and other welfare

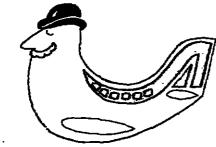

But employers, describing the selective strikes as a danger to society in key sectors, said after all-night talks with the union that the concessions were not enough.

Bertrand Tavernier: A respect for the lonely "outlaw."

French Director Searches For the Jazzman's Soul

By Michael Zwerin International Herald Tribune

PARIS — "Long Tall Dexter"

I Gordon, a photogenic 6-foot-5 with bushy gray sideburns, the link between Lester Young and John Coltrane, has been signed by the French director Bertrand Tavernier to star in his next film, "Autour de Minuit," scheduled to be shot in July in Paris.

The title is a translation of Thelonious Monk's "Round Midnight." Gordon will play a compos-ite drawn from the lives of Young and Bud Powell, and from Powell's relationship with the French photographer Francis Pandras. He will also play the saxophone. According to Tavernier, the director of "A Sunday in the Country," the film searches for the real sensitivity of

It takes a tough skin, steady nerves, a stout heart and psycholo-

Taver-nier adds: "There was a strong suicidal streak in the first generation of black bebop musicians. Many of them eventually closed themselves off from the world. Dexter is one of the rare survivors." This breed of lonely "outlaw" has long had the respect of the film's executive producer, Irwin Winkler ("Raging Bull," "The Right Stuff"), who found the $3 million in financing, and of Tavernier, who said: "It is only because of our passion that this film exists."

Herbie Hancock plays Gordon's pianist, both audially and visually (with Billy Higgins, drums, and Pierre Michelot, bass). He is also composing the score; he began to

sized love for jazz, as a form of holy lonely endeavor they wish they were capable of. Tavernier wants "to dramatize the force of these musicians and their music."

Michel Boutinard Rouelle, for another example, inaugurated the Paris Jazz Festival when he was director of culture for the city. "I felt so proud to be able to hire Miles Davis," he said, laughing, somewhat embarrassed to define himself in such a "groupie" per-spective. "Autour de Minuit" is about the relationship between an Afro-American saxophonist, played by Gordon, and this kind of "The dramatic idea," Tavernier explained, "is a strange friendship between two men from different cultures. The Frenchman, played by François Cluzet, falls so much in love with the music and the saxophonist who plays it that his own life begins to fall apart. He neglects ed society. Those who choose the his obligations to his 11-year-old daughter. Jazz is his mistress, in a way. It's a love story, really."

A Frenchman saves Gordon's life in the film; a real-life drama mirrors this plot. Gordon, 62, has been ill recently, a victim of past excess, the wearying road life and age in general. "I am very content," Tavernier said, "because I think this role has given Dexter a reason to live. He was very weak a year and a half ago when I first talked to tryman, Sir Rabindranath Tagore, him about the film — weak, and the Bengali poet-playwright, whom him about the film — weak, and the Bengali poet-playwright, whom skeptical. A wide variety of musical material will include standards like "As Time Goes By" that are associated with Gordon; original compositions by Hancock; and Bud Powell tunes, from "Un Poco Loco" (a tenor saxophone "cutting session" with Wayne Shorter) to his forgotten ballad "Time Waits." Bobby Hutcherson, Freddie Hubbard, Tony Williams and Ron Carter, among others, will have playing and speaking roles.

"There are many things I can never understand about the life of an Afro-American jazz musician," Tavernier said. "I did not grow up musician when I read your screen- in that milien. His collection was not monastic, however, and daytime splendor made up for evening simplicity. He opened with a bright red-and-black plaid coat edged with sable. As for the black broadtail suit topped by a silver fox coat, it would be just the and opulent approach.

Clashing colors like cymbals, he combined raspberry, purple and green, often in Jersey outlits topped by softly tailored three-quarter coats. In a more dressy mood than Blass, he showed slim sweaters draped down the front or the sides, accented with contrasting buttons. De la Renta offered an impressive set of party options, including a basic: the blouse and big skirt, which is emerging as an important evening story. The prettiest were in soft satin pastels, mixing oatmeal and turquoise or pink and aqua. Included in this group were page-boy pants, also of satin, belted with

Every other designer on both sides of the Atlantic has done the romantic, tapestry and paisley look, but nobody did it as well and as thoroughly as Lauren. The result was young and fresh.

Jodhpurs and dandified brocade or suede vests were worn with velvet jackets, topped by little capes. Accessories emphasized the look with derbies, ivory lace ascot col-lars pinned with cameo brooches, pearl chokers, riding sticks and eold watch chains.

But the delivery was no camou-flage for beautiful ciothes that could stand on their own. The long tailored coats, skimming the body could be worn anywhere and by anybody. So could the tailored Harris tweed jackets, the smooth and pale snede pants and swirling skirts and the tapestry Nehru jack-ets in faded chintz colors.

The Paris designer Karl Lagerfeld made a successful debut with his first American-made sportswear collection. In better form than in Paris, Lagerfeld showed he could get a good grip on this market with strongly shaped and tailored clothes that managed to have a lot of Lagerfeld's old wit. The suits, with strong shoulders and skinny skirts, were beautifully cut. Graph ic, colorful knits, which he called "video knits," were armising, and the sporty, leather outlits looked great. Unfortunately, the short cocktail dresses, which featured strange peek-a-boos, looked cheap.

Perry Ellis's collection revolved around miniskirts and long jackets that somehow had a skimpy look. The evening version was of satin with one, two or three little ruffles at the hem. Ellis called them slips There was a slightly medieval feeling in the hooded and short shapes the short sleeveless tops over col ored legs. Ellis fared better with striking animal sweaters, featuring unicorns or Russian wolfhounds. He also scored with wonderful men's clothes, strong, colorful and tries, which owns Perry Ellis. Donna Karan closed the week with her first solo collection. She used to design the enormously successful Anne Klein collection joint-

Both have strong personalities but Karan has a softer, more feminine approach. Her use of gold accessories was quite effective.

The most important single item was the body stocking, which was worn under everything, including long and swirling skirts. Black turtleneck sweaters, men's trousers and long polo coats made the best and simplest statement. There was a great selection of coats, from short cashmere trench coats to satin-faced cashmere bathrobes. Seduction was the name of the game, with body-hugging black cashmere sheaths, their sculptural, draped skirts unfolding all the way up the leg.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Common Processing Move Takes Industry by Surprise

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

EW YORK - "After years of talk about common processing and clearing of securities in futures and options trading, common sense has finally prevailed and this will soon become a reality," Lewis J. Horowitz, president of the New York Futures Exchange, said. "We are arranging to have Options Clearing Corp. process and clear out index futures and options transactions."

But Mr. Horowitz's surprising news on Friday, while the most important, was only one of several far-reaching developments that excited — and dismayed — many in the futures and options industry last week.

In discussing the breakthrough in common processing and clearing. Mr. Horowitz also noted that the move would also be a giant step in the integration of the securities,

A single clearing entity allows hedgers futures and options markets. The New York Futures Exto use surpluses change, for example, is a sub-sidiary of the New York Stock to cover debits. Clearing Corp. basically transfers the debits and credits of its exchange members and helps process trades, thus eliminating duplication by individual options exchanges. Currently, the corporation clears the trades of the stock and index options traded on securities exchanges as well as the Philadelphia Stock Exchange's foreign currency options and the American Stock Exchange's new cash-settled gold options.

T "may have made sense in the quill-pen era to have each exchange do its own clearing, but today the futures and options business is too big, too vital, to be hobbled by 11 separate and costly clearing operations," Mr. Horowitz noted. "Not only is one clearing entity cost effective, but it will greatly increase market liquidity by, in effect, permitting traders to stretch their capital by the cross-collateralization of their futures

Put another way, a single clearing entity would allow hedgers and traders to use surpluses, say, on their futures accounts, to cover debits on their options positions and vice versa.

Also, a unified clearing system would serve as an early warning indicator of the impending insolvency of brokers, exchange-floor traders and other market participants, because they would all be reporting their positions to one entity each day, Mr. Horowitz

The second major surprise was delivered by Michael N.H. Jenkins, chief executive of the London International Financial Futures Exchange, during his visit to New York last week. On June 27, his exchange plans to start trading Eurodollar options that buyers will be able to margin the same way they now do the underlying futures.

One of the problems of options, be they settled in cash or through the delivery of underlying futures contracts, is that the investor cannot tap any accumulated profits unless the instru-ments are exercised," Mr. Jenkins said. "By letting options investors buy on margin, which only options grantors can do at present, they can use their profits to increase their positions."

However, the options buyer's limited-risk advantage would continue to be protected, he said, because the buyer's maximum loss would still be limited to the premium paid for the right to buy (call) or sell (put) the underlying fatures at a fixed price during a set period of time. But, instead of putting up the full cost of the premium, buyers would be able to make a small cash payment.

China Set For Large Stock Sale

Issue to Finance A New Railroad

The Associated Press BEIJING — China has sano tioned a stock sale to raise $385 million for building the nation's longest railroad line, an official news report said Monday.

It appeared to be the higgest stock offering since the Communist Party resurrected the once-denounced capitalist practice last year to help finance economic de-velopment.

The state-run China News Service said the stock will be offered by the government of the Inner Mongolia autonomous region, a vast plain along the Mongolian

The news service quoted Inner Mongolia's Communist Party secretary, Zhou Huiri, as saying the stock sale will finance the proposed Jining-Tongliao railway, a 540-mile (832-kilometer) project that, when completed, will be China's longest single rail line.

It is to run from the Inner Mongolia city of Jining northeast through Liaoning province to the city of Tongliao in Jilin province, opening an important corndor to move freight and passengers through China's northern interior, the report said.

There was no explanation of how the stock will be sold and whether the buyers will be Chinese, foreigners or both. The report also gave no details of share prices or dividends. But it was likely that the buyers will not be limited to Inner Mongo-

Chief Steers NYSE Toward Change

Municipalities Are Called Inept After 2 Failures

By Stan Hinden Washington Post Service

NEW YORK - As a boy, John J. Phelan Jr. delivered newspapers in an affluent Long Island community where he learned an early lesson about the risks and rewards of business.

"The bigger the house, the smaller the tip," he jokingly recalled.

As chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, Mr. Phelan, 53, still is concerned about risks and rewards as they affect the future of the Big Board. competition among the stock exchanges, the practices of the securities industry and protection of

One key concern for Mr. Phelan at present is the unwarranted investment risk he believes some municipal officials are taking with public funds in their search for high returns.

He also is critical of municipal officials who, while unwilling to hire professional money managers, are more than willing to invest their funds with what he called "a firm that nobody in the world had ever heard of before" in return for a "point and a half over prime."

And he characterized the actions of such municipalities as "ineptness" and a "lack of professional-

Mr. Phelan expressed these views against the background of two recent failures of unregulated government-securities houses. These companies offer municipalities a chance to improve the yields on their funds through so-called repurchase agree-

The failure in early March of ESM Government Securities Inc. of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, for instance, will cost a dozen or so municipalities and five savings and loan associations an estimated

One of the losers was Beaumont, Texas, which lost $20 million when it could find no record of the government securities that supposedly served as collateral for the money it loaned ESM.

ESM, charged with fraud by the Securities and Exchange Commission, pledged the same securities for loans from several customers.

The second failure, concerned Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corp., of Livingston, New Jersey, an unregulated government-securities concern whose clients may lose as much as $198 million. The company, which collapsed early last month, dealt mainly with savings and loan associations.

John J. Phelan Jr.

But Mr. Phelan is also concerned about change and the way the 192-year-old NYSE does business. He considers global 24-hour trading "inevitable." He envisions the exchange attempting to forge electronic links with other exchanges without lowering its financial and ethical standards.

New York, London and Tokyo will be linked, he forecast, adding that the exchanges will have to guarantee the trades within the system and exchange surveillance data.

"I think you can work that out on an interna-tional level," he said. "And I think that (by) providing the mechanisms in which the execution (of trades) can take place, you've almost got the entire audit trail there." An audit trail provides an electronic record of trading.

The NYSE, Mr. Phelan noted, is holding talks with the Pacific Stock Exchange on a possible merger, which might allow the NYSE to extend its trading hours. (The Pacific exchange currently operates from 7 A.M. to 1:30 P.M. or from 10 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. New York time. That is half an hour later than the NYSE.)

Further, administrative costs will be "significantly reduced," partially by reducing employment, although the number of employees affected was not determined, the company said.

The decision to shed Montgomery Ward, which Mobil bought for $1.7 billion in 1976, is not a surprise. Mobil, the second largest U.S. oil company, hired Goldman Sachs & Co. in February to help it evaluate its businesses.

Billions of Japanese Investment Dollars Pouring Into U.S.

By John Burgess

TOKYO - Just as the automobiles and video machines of the Japanese have become mainstays of the U.S. economy, so now have their investment dollars.

In a fundamental shift in world financial flows, Japan is exporting a mammoth wave of dollars to purchase foreign stocks and bonds. Much of the money is going to New York, where it plays an important role in financing the federal deficit.

Washington and Tokyo periodically trade inconclusive proposals on how to tackle it. In the meantime, the capital exodus continues to mount. In January, $3.5 billion left the country, in February $4.7 billion, in March $6.6 billion.

During the year, foreign investors were unloading Japanese stocks from their portfolios. The only significant flow of term money into Japan was in bond purchases by foreigners, making total inflow to only $7 billion. The result was a $50 billion net outflow.

At the close of 1984, according to Normura, Japanese commercial banks held around $18 billion in foreign securities, a 62 percent rise over 1983. Life insurance companies' holdings rose 31 percent to $15 billion.

The U.S. is believed to have accounted for about half of Japan's new securities purchases in 1984, with U.S. government paper being the most popular acquisition. Many Japanese feel a bit uneasy with the U.S. corporate securities.

The stock market is looking for direction from two sources - the bond market and the economy. Neither is offering any right now, said Hugh Johnson, of First Albany Corp.

Mr. Johnson noted that the trade summit in Europe produced nothing encouraging. guarded and extremely edgy," he said, and are "skeptical of economists' forecasts of 3 to 4 percent growth in the gross national product in the second quarter."

The market is in an intermediate-term correction, said Robert W. Colby, of Smith Barney, Harris Upham. Depleted institutional cash levels and a scarcity of bears have left the market exhausted, he said.

Despite some positive minor technical indica-tors, Mr. Colby said the market's upside poten-

The prospect of lower interest rates was propelling Monday's early gains, he said.

It seems like last week was just a technical downturn. We should be off and running

The decline of more than 27 points in the Dow last week "scared a few people," he said. On the trading floor, Arco was near the top of the actives, and slightly lower. Mobil was up a bit in active trading after taking steps toward the sale of its Montgomery Ward subsidiary. in other petroleums, Exxon, Phillips Petroleum, Texaco and Chevron were fractionally

American Cyanamid was lower in active trading on rumors that the Food and Drug Administration required more testing for a new anti-cancer drug. The company said it still opes for approval for the drug by year's end.
Gannett was up a bit and CBS was slightly

Storer Communications was fractionally low-er. It approved a $1.64 billion leveraged buyout, but speculation continued that Tele-Communications may make a play for the company. Both Warner Communications and Chris-Craft Industries were higher.

In technologies, gainers included IBM, Digital Equipment, NCR Corp. and Honeywell. E.F. Hutton was off a bit on reports it may have to pay up to $50 million in restitution to banks it defrauded. Hutton said the reserve of $8 million it established would be adequate.

U.S. Consumption Of Energy Rises

WASHINGTON — U.S. energy consumption rose last year for the first time since 1979, but domestic energy production rose to a new record and more than matched the increase, the Energy Department said Monday.

In its annual energy review, the department's Energy Information Administration reported a continuing shift in consumption patterns from oil and gas to electricity generated by coal and nuclear power.

But petroleum continued to the country's single biggest source of energy, accounting for 42 percent of total energy use, the panel said.

He said that during that period Nigeria would pay the interest, which is I percent above the London interbank offered rate. "While we are negotiating, we are honoring the interest payable to our trading partners."

General Buhari said the short and long-term debts, estimated recently at over $15 billion, were "not bad by our economic standards."

Nigeria expects to earn about $9.6 billion this year from oil, and 44 percent of the income is targeted to service external debts, General Buhari said.

PANAMA CITY — The civilian president of Panama has named a new cabinet that gives more influence to the military-backed coalition that helped bring him to pow-

Ricardo Arias Calderón, an opposition leader, charged Sunday that the changes amounted to a virtual military takeover of President Nicolas Ardito Barletta's seven-month government. The cabinet resigned Friday, provoking rumors of a coup. A communique issued Sunday by the presidential press office described the new 12-member cabinet, which includes six holdovers, as "more representative" of the parties that backed Mr. Barletta's candidacy.

Murdoch May Lose Australian TV Outlets

CANBERRA, Australia - Australian representatives of Rupert Murdoch's News Corp Ltd. met Monday with officials of the government organization that regulates broadcasting in Australia to discuss Mr. Murdoch's plans to buy a chain of American television stations, a spokesman for the body

The meeting follows a statement by David Jones, chairman of the Australian Broadcasting Tribunal. that Mr. Murdoch's current holdings in Australia would contravene broadcasting laws in the country if he became a U.S. citizen. Mr. Murdoch said in New York

Saturday that he planned to become a U.S. citizen to clear the way for the purchase of six television stations owned by Metromedia Inc. for approximately $2 billion.

The proposed transaction involves stations in New York City, Los Angeles, Chicago, Dallas, Houston and Washington. To complete the transaction Mr. Murdoch may have to sell newspapers he owns in New York and Chicago since U.S. regulations prohibit joint ownership of both a television station and a newspaper in the

In Australia, News Corp. con-trols television stations in Melbourne and Sydney. The licenses for both stations are up for renewa by the tribunal this year.

Under Australian law, owners of television stations must be australian citizens. Official sources said the government was unlikely to change the legislation to enable Mr. Murdoch to retain the stations.

One possible way Mr. Murdoch could try to keep control would be for the stations to be placed in a trust to be administered by an Australian board, media analysts said.

The two Australian stations would be worth up to 300 million Australian dollars ($195 million), financial analysts said.

Tribune Stock Rises

The price of stock of Tribune Co., which owns the Chicago Tribune and the New York Daily News newspapers, rose sharply Monday, reflecting a belief that Mr. Murdoch's entry into U.S. television would lessen newspaper competition in New York and possibly Chicago.

Tribune stock had risen 2-1/4 to 44-7/8 by midday after a delayed opening. Tribune and Mr. Murdoch each own newspapers in New York and Chicago.

"Assuming Murdoch does wind up with the TV stations in New York and Chicago, it seems likely he will choose to dispose of the papers rather than the stations." said J. Kendrick Noble, a newspaper analyst at Paine Webber Co.

WITH FRIENDS POSSESSED: A Life of Edward FitzGerald.

BOOKS

By Robert Bernard Martin. 313 pp. $17.95. [[bustrated.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THERE are two passages in this life of Edward FitzGerald (1809-1883) where its protagonist comes especially alive. In one of them, the writer best known to posterity as the translator of "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam" learns as he is sitting down to dinner that his companion is about to have a ship named after him. According to the friend, FitzGerald expressed playful horror, "jumped up, chair and all," and took himself "into the far corner of the room, professing he could not presume to sit at the same table with one about to have a ship named after him." In the other passage, he is depicted walking the streets and beaches of the East Suffolk town of Lowestoft, carrying rum and tobacco and looking for attractive sailors to befriend. As Robert Bernard Martin writes, "He was a distinctive figure on the lonely Lowestoft beach, his obviously expensive but ill-tended clothes thrown on anyhow, his top hat an-chored against the sea wind by a scarf fied under his chin, on his face such a curious combination of apprehensive hauteur and excessive vulnerability that many" of the sailors "thought he was mad."

Throughout this estimable life, Martin stresses the playful side of FitzGerald, and there is abundant evidence in the anecdotes and correspondence he cites of a man forever in search of fun who sometimes carried his jokes to extremes. But it is the latter portrait of FitzGerald we take away with us. For however much the joker and playful companion is stressed, we find it hard to forget the image of FitzGerald as the son of an overbearing mother, as a friend so dependent on the handsome men he adored that the very topography of England was colored by his feelings for them, and as a man whose only time of unadulterated misery was provoked by a brief and disastrous marriage, after his mother's death, to a woman he referred to uncharitably as "the contempo-Nonetheless, one must be leary of fabricating stereotypes. Martin — who during a long career teaching at Princeton, Leicester Univer-sity and the University of Hawaii, has written numerous studies of Victorian literature, including "Tennyson: The Unquiet Heart" (1980) - assures us that FitzGerald "probably never directly faced the emotions" that attrac-tive men provoked within him. He writes that if "our own day overemphasizes sexuality as the cause of behaviour and emotion," conversely many Victorians managed what seems to us the difficult balancing act of believing that love between men which had no overt physical consequences was therefore untouched by physical motivation." We must accordingly hold in our minds an image of FitzGerald that would be difficult to sustain were he living

odex : 279,00

LOS ANGELES - The chairman of U.S. Steel Corp. on Mon-day predicted the industry would shrink over the next five years and said his company would survive only if imports are restricted and labor unions grant concessions. Chairman David Roderick said the company was hopeful that vol-untary import restrictions sought by the Reagan administration will But he wasn't overly optimistic. "The import level from foreign steelmakers, rather than declining percent" of the domestic market, Mr. Roderick said at the compa-ny's annual meeting. "If the [voluntary import restric-tion] program is to be of help, it must begin to show some positive results soon," Mr. Roderick said. "Its effectiveness rests upon its vig-orous and rigorous enforcement." Mr. Roderick also reiterated the company's stance that pay and pro-ductivity concessions were vital to keep U.S. Steel competitive with domestic and foreign producers.

Last week, five major American steel companies canceled a three-decade-old policy of coordinated hargaining with unions. That move was seen as weakening unions and enhancing the possibility of a strike in the industry.

Mr. Roderick declined to specu-late on the prospect of labor strife. He predicted that company earn-ings would rise, but only slightly, through 1986.

The company earned $493 mil-lion on sales of $19.1 billion in 1984 and had a profit of $58 million on sales of $4.5 billion in the first quarter of this year.

Mr. Roderick denied speculation that U.S. Steel is in the market for a major acquisition to further insu-late the company against the cycli-cal nature of the steel industry.

Kite Takes Champions Golf by 6 Shots

CARLSBAD, California (AP) — Front-runner Tom Kite closed the door with 3-under-par 69 here Sunday to score a 6-stroke victory in the Tournament of Champions. Kite had a 275 total, 13-under par on the 6.91 l-yard La Costa Country Club course.

Kite's eighth career trimmph, in the event that brings together only the winners of PGA tour titles from the last 12 months, was worth $72,000 from a total purse of $400,000.

With a course record-matching 64 in the opening round, Kite led by three strokes going into Sun-day's final 18 holes and never faltered. He had a three-shot margin going to the back nine and settled matters for good with a pitch from the rough to set up a four-foot birdie putt on No. 15. Mark McCumber finished sec-over the net until it suddenly dipped, struck the crossbar and caromed down behind Lindbergh.

The game-winner came about 90 seconds after Lindbergh misplayed a long shot by Alain Cote that struck the right post.

Lindbergh "was probably getting tired," said Stastny, "because on Cote's shot from the blue line he barely made the save and pushed it to the goal post. On mine, the puck bounced before I hit it, and wasn't flat — it was rotating. It seemed to be going over the net, then suddenly it hit the crossbar and went in."

Lindbergh, who stopped 42 shots, and Gosselin were sensational all night long. There was no scoring until 7:13 of the third period, when Dale Hunter's midair deflection of a shot by Michel Goulet put mebec in front.

It was the Nordiques' fourth overtime victory without a loss in the playoffs. Stastny felt part of the reason was a change in philosophy. "Last year we were terrible in overtime, because all we did was defend," he said. "If you just defend, you'll tie or lose. And in the playoffs there are no ties. Clues to Women's Cults of Antiquity

By Eric Pace New York Times Service

NEW YORK — The excavation of a mysterious shrine in southern Italy has renewed scholarly interest in a shadowy allwoman cult that was among the oldest and most prestigious of all religious groups of

Three seasons of digging, under the field direction of John Griffiths Pedley of the University of Michigan, have turned up clues about the secret rites of the goddess known in Latin as Bona Dea — the good goddess. Pedley, a professor of classical archaeology who is director of the university's Kelsey Museum of Archeology, said, "We are generally getting a much clearer view of what the inside of a sanctuary of Bona Dea was like." Strange anatomical models, left by cured or ailing women, have been unearthed, along with quantities of cups thought to have been used for drinking wine.

Pedley said the cult may have arrived in Rome as early as the sixth century B.C. Evolving over time, it continued into the third century A.D.

Scholars believe that early on the goddess came to have wide and varied powers in the eyes of her devotees. She was sometimes identified or linked with Venus and Juno. Over the centuries, her intercession was variously sought for healing, fertility, freedom from slavery, fruitfulness in agriculture and protection of the Roman people.

Excavations of the shrine and other sites where women's cults gathered in antiquity are particularly important, said Sarah B. Po-meroy, a professor of classics at Hunter College, because ancient authors, almost all of them men, wrote very little about the cults, and what they did write was generally biased and often incorrect. "Given the fact that these cults were often secret, how could any man know what was actually going on?" said Pomeroy, author of that, as she put it in the book. "We tend to the 1975 book "Goddesses, Whores, Wives forget that — despite a dazzling veneer of and Slaves: Women in Classical Antiquity." Pedley and his co-workers hypothesize, on the basis of ancient texts and inscriptions, that the goddess who became known as Bona Dea was brought to the Italian peninsula, under the Greek name Damia, by the Greeks, who in about 600 B.C. founded Paestum, southeast of Naples, where the shrine stood. Originally named Poseidonia, the city was later occupied by a warlike southern Italian people, the Lucanians, before being taken

Opinions also varied as to why women of antiquity engaged in religious cults such as that of Bona Dea. Pomeroy voiced the view that, as she put it in the book, "We tend to literary and artistic achievements - Greece and Rome were warrior societies. What really mattered was winning wars and maintaining an empire. Except in their role as bearers of future soldiers, most women were peripheral to those concerns." Roman religion, she contended, "afforded an outlet for those whose lives were circumscribed in other ways." But Professor Mary R. Lefkowitz, a classicist at Wellesley College, said cult activity had very important social functions. "It gave women a chance to meet with other women outside their own families and obviously to It was in the city of Rome that Bona Dea was worshiped particularly extensively, but the goddess also had devotees at the Roman port of Ostia and elsewhere, as far afield as authors as Cicero wrote about it. It was a major Roman state cult in which high-born women gathered to do her honor in all-night rites twice a year: in May in a temple dedicated to her at the foot of the Aventine Hill, one of Rome's seven hills, and in early December in the house of a magistrate.

Weaving together ancient writers' scanty accounts, the Oxford University scholar J.P.V.D. Balsdon wrote in his 1962 book, Roman Women: Their History and Habits. that the magistrate and other men of his family left the house for the night and "representations of male persons and animals, in statues, paintings and mosaics were decently

Balsdon wrote, "The central point of the evening's celebration was the sacrifice of a sow. Houses in the center of Rome not being large, it was, one would guess, a crowded, stuffy and smelly occasion."
"Of what took place," Balsdon noted,

"naturally, men knew no more than women little. The Greek writer Plutarch concluded that the ritual was decorous, but the Latin poet and author Juvenal described it as leading to debauchery with men.

Painting what Pomeroy called a distorted picture of things he wanted to denounce, Juvenal wrote: "My god! Women get all stirred up with wine and wild music; they drive themselves crazy."

As practiced at the Paestum sanctuary complex, the cult had a different setting. The rites went on in two buildings, a rectangular temple, about 30 by 50 feet (9 by 15 meters), and a rectangular hall, 70 feet by 50 feet, both originally built in the fifth century B.C.

Pedley is returning to the site this month for a fourth season. He and co-workers have written about the first three in articles in The American Journal of Archeology. The excavations have been financed by the National Endowment for the Humanities, by private donors and by the universities of Michigan and of Perugia in Italy.

The excavations are under the joint leadership of Pedley and Professor Mario Torelli, director of the Institute of Archaeology of the University of Perugia, in collaboration with Werner Johannowsky, an Italian scholar who is superintendent of antiquities for the region of Italy that includes Paestum.

Almost 2,000 objects, left at the shrine as offerings from the goddess's devotees over the centuries, have been unearthed by Pedley's team and earlier excavators.

Among the objects are small terra-cotta models of arms as well as wombs and eyes left by women who were either asking the goddess's aid in healing physical and mental ills or thanking her for such help.

Pedley's excavations have also unearthed quantities of terra-cotta female figurines and terra-cotta loomweights, which were employed to keep threads tight during weaving.
